

DRAFT STATEMENT

1. The Prime Minister and the Taoiseach discussed a range of matters of common interest, with particular focus on Northern Ireland.
2. They totally condemned the recent terrorist outrages - murders and premeditated acts which could serve no end other than to deepen the bloodshed in Northern Ireland. They expressed deep sympathy to the innocent victims - children, women and men who had been injured or bereaved.
3. The Prime Minister and Taoiseach called for restraint from all members of the community in Northern Ireland; expressed support for the Security Forces in their fight against all forms of terrorism; and noted the recent successes of cross-border security co-operation.
4. They utterly repudiated the use of violence for political ends. Their two Governments were resolute in their determination to ensure that those who adopted or supported such methods should never succeed.
5. The Taoiseach gave the Prime Minister an account of the outcome of the Hume/Adams dialogue, in the light of the Irish Government's own assessment of this and other related matters. [While they acknowledged Mr Hume's courageous and imaginative efforts, the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach agreed that the two Governments must work together to reach a common understanding in their own terms on a framework for peace, consistent with their international obligations and their wider responsibilities to both communities.] [While they acknowledged John Hume's courageous and imaginative efforts, the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach agreed that there could be no question of them simply adopting or endorsing this approach.

[They agreed that the two Governments must continue to work together in their own terms on a framework for peace, stability and reconciliation, consistent with their international obligations and their wider responsibilities to both communities. They noted that the Talks process, which involves also the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland, provided the best context for this.]

6. Against this background the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach reaffirmed that:

- the situation in Northern Ireland should never be changed by violence or the threat of violence;
- any political development or settlement depended on consent freely given in the absence of force or intimidation;
- negotiations on a political settlement could only take place between democratic governments and parties committed exclusively to constitutional methods and consequently there can be no talks or negotiations between their Governments and those who use, threaten or support violence for political ends;
- there could be no secret agreements or understandings between Governments and organisations supporting violence as a price for its cessation;
- all those claiming a serious interest in advancing the cause of peace in Ireland should renounce for good the use of or support for violence;

() - if and when such a renunciation of violence had been made and sufficiently demonstrated, new doors could open, and both Governments would wish to respond imaginatively to the new situation which would arise.

7. The Prime Minister and Taoiseach renewed their support for the objectives of the Talks process involving constitutional political dialogue between the two Governments and the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland. They regard that process as vital and its objectives as valid and achievable. They urged the Northern Ireland parties to return to the negotiation process. The Taoiseach and the Prime Minister agreed that the two Governments will continue their discussions to provide a framework to carry it forward.
