ONE of the gopher diggers of the Red river valley who is engaged in building a constitution "for the people" refers to this section of North Dakota as the "hills and rocks inhabited by a few cow boys," and wishes to deprive us of just representation in the legislature. The conceited little demagogue had probably never been west of the Red river valley until he came to Bismarck and imagines that his home is the whole of North Dakota. The cow boys are as good a class of citizens as can be found in Dakota and the stock-men of this section have rights the members of the convention are bound to respect unless they are preparing a document exclusively for the Red river valley and in that case we do not expect much; but the ing; but a day of retribution came.
