

J. Z. MOORE. Of Spokane Falls, is one of the leading members of the Convention, as he is one of the ablest and most influential. Possessing a massive brain, the magazine of a highly cultivated intellect, he is an acknowledged power in the Convention, as he is conceded to be one of it. His strong, well-balanced mind, highly educated both in the perceptible and reflective faculties, enables him to comprehend people and the subjects that come before the body for his consideration and to fully apprehend the principles involved. He is a frequent and very fluent speaker and in well-rounded sentences, of the purest English, he always commands the attention and interest of his audience, frequently electrifying and inspiring them by his eloquence. In the Convention, he is a medium height, well and stoutly built, very gentlemanly in deportment, with a well-formed head, a moustache, but no beard, a fine frank countenance, and a generous, generous, warm-hearted character of the man. He is a native of Kentucky, but removed in early life to Missouri, where he attended school, as he could be spared from the labors of the farm. By dint of great personal exertion, he worked his way through college, graduating at Miami University, Ohio, attended Harvard Law School, was admitted to the bar in 1868, and especially took high rank in his profession. He was a member of the Chicago Convention that nominated Blaine in 1864; came to the Territory in 1866 and was admitted to the bar in 1868, and there he has been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession. He is 44 years old, married, and his accomplished wife accompanies him to this city.

M. J. M'ELROY. Of King county, is a man of great practical judgment and experience, who will faithfully protect the rights and interests of the people and intelligently perform his duty in constructing the Constitution of the State of Washington. He is not often heard on the floor of the Convention, because he is not vain of his voice, but when he does speak his words are replete with good, practical sense. He is of medium height, dark brown hair, blue eyes, and a face of a handsome, full of mirth and cordial good nature that assures his popularity with the people. He is a native of Maine and came to Puget Sound in 1871; was a member of the last Legislature, and was appointed by Gov. Sempie Timber Inspector, which he resigned to accept the position of Secretary of the Loggers' Association, and in that capacity became thoroughly acquainted with the lumber interests and resources, and an expert cruiser of timber lands. He is 31 years old and married.

D. BUCHANAN. Of Breville, Adams county, is the oldest member of the Convention, and is venerated as the sage and father of the body in which he acts so influential a part. Being a man of a clear mind, ready speech, conscientious and independent, he is one of the most useful members of this body of sterling men. Having no aspirations for office, and by nature far from being a demagogue or time server. He is actuated by a strong determination to have constructed for the State a Constitution as free as possible from flaws or blemish. He is about medium height, well built, with a remarkably vigorous manhood for one of his years, with hair and beard somewhat gray and a face denoting firmness, high moral character and kindness. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and immigrated to Wisconsin in 1850, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in 1855 came to the Territory and has since been a thrifty and respected farmer of Adams county. He has uniformly declined office, but yielded in this instance to the persuasion of his friends, and in the determination of the people of his district to have him represent them in this Convention, as they knew he would carefully guard their rights and interests. He is 69 years old and married.

S. H. BERRY. Of Okahalis, Lewis county, is one of the few members whose persistent assiduity should have given place to being by discussion on the floor of the Convention, in solving great questions that come before it, and of which he is eminently capable. He is a tall, fine looking, gentlemanly man, with a face denoting the scholar and thinker. He has black hair, classical features, and wears a moustache, but no beard. He was born in Missouri; possessed a liberal education; was principal of the Linn High School for several years; was County Surveyor of his native county eight years; came to Lewis county, W. T., in 1881, pursuing the law, and was elected Auditor, which office he filled very satisfactorily for four years, and is now engaged in the mercantile business. He is 40 years old, married, and his wife is seated.

R. H. SULLIVAN. Of Colfax, Whitman county, who is one that allows no subject coming before the Convention to escape his careful examination and critical analysis. He is a fluent speaker, with clear enunciation, is intelligent and fearless, and frequently participates in the discussions. He is a little less than medium height, with an active organization, sandy complexion, pleasant face, with moustache, but no beard. He was born in Michigan, came to Oregon in 1853, and to this Territory in 1877; was admitted to the bar at Colfax in 1880, where he has since resided; engaged in the practice of his profession, and was Prosecuting Attorney for two years. He is 39 years old, married.

D. E. DURIE. Of Seattle, will rank with the foremost of the members in intelligence, earnestness of purpose, patriotism, and all the moral virtues that adorn human character. In other words, he is an exceedingly fine specimen of the sons of Bonnie Scotland, who love their native soil, but the free institutions of America better. He is a clear, terse, forcible, but not a frequent speaker, and never occupies the floor for but a brief and to the point. He is above the average height, well and compactly built, fair complexioned, with a clear, frank honest face that commands the admiration of all observers. He wears a moustache, but no beard. He was born in Montrose, Scotland, and immigrated to the United States in 1864, and after living for several years in Wisconsin and Kansas, came to this Territory in 1881, for a period engaged in stock raising, farming and merchandising, and in 1883 he settled at Seattle and engaged in mercantile pursuits, and was burned out in the great fire of June 5. He is a Connelman of that city at this time; is 48 years old, and married.

R. JEFFE. Of Newcastle, King county, is one of the silent voting members, and doubtless thinks he can be of more service by his vote than by making buncombe speeches. He is evidently of good judgment and sound principles. One thing is certain, he is not an office-seeker. He is a tall, plain, unassuming man, with a kind, neighborly face, and a full beard. He was born in New York, and came to this Territory

TIMBER GROWTH

The somewhat surprising remark was made by a veteran logger some time ago that the growth of fir and cedar timber in this Territory was equal, at the present time, to that which yearly taken out of the forests. Improbable as this may at first thought appear, a proper qualification of the assertion brings the question within the sphere of easy solution. Old settlers in Oregon assert that what they found as mere shoots from thirty to forty years ago are now trees that are capable of producing a stick twelve feet long that will square one foot. Now when we take into account the thousands of acres of such growing timber as this, it is easy to see that the great aggregate of production must reach to an extent that would be truly enormous. One condition of this curious problem is the fact that every seedling that springs up within the limits of the Territory is annually adding its ring-growth to its diameter, and hence it is that millions upon millions of such individual accretions of woody fiber must amount to something quite beyond our means of calculation.

Loggers are only at work a certain number of hours during six days of the week. Nature is at work twenty-four hours every day in the year. Loggers play the vacuum for fixed periods of time, and then cease altogether, but nature knows no success. It is well-known that all cone-bearing trees are rapid growers, which means that the annual rings are thicker for the same diameter than they are in other and harder kinds of timber. There are large areas in the Willamette valley where the first settlers, thirty and forty years ago cleared off the primeval forests of fir and cedar for lumbering purposes and left the land otherwise untouched. These tracts are now covered with beautiful and exceedingly uniform growths of timber, the larger specimens of which will afford logs twelve feet long squaring twelve inches.

But what is true in Oregon is equally true in Washington Territory. Until the whites came here, the Indians were wont to burn large tracts of young timber for the sake of promoting the growth of blackberries, a practice which is every year resorted to in the remote districts, clandestinely. In such places, of course, nature calls a halt and there is no such annual timber increase as has been cited above.

But when left alone and protected it is demonstrable that fir timber will reproduce itself in fifty years. That is to say, a forest can be reared from seedlings which in half a century will be ready to subserve all the ordinary purposes to which square timber and lumber are generally applied. Thus it will be seen that with proper care the timber resources of the northwest Pacific coast can be rendered practically inexhaustible.

THE VANGUARD. From all accounts it would appear that the advance guard of the great tidal wave of immigration had reached the Sound districts. Late reports from the land offices show that never in the history of the Territory has there been such a rush to timber and agricultural lands. Veteran "cruisers" have all they can do to locate claims of purchasers. The money that has been paid to the government for land during the past twelve months in Washington Territory reaches far into the millions, and the number of applications are coming in as fast as clerks can attend to the business.

Private sales are also increasing. Old settlers are beginning to see and realize that for years they have been "land poor" and are now gladly disposing of large tracts that have so long been a source of heavy expense for taxes without any compensating return. The old refrain, "Man wants but little here" below, is exemplified in no better way than in land possession. Long ago agricultural economists laid it down as a rule that a man can support himself and family on ten acres of productive soil. But we have farmers of Thurston county who find it up-hill business to live on a quarter section of land. When we hear of large land proprietors dividing their broad acres with incoming settlers ready and eager to hew out for themselves homes in the dense forests, then have we a strong and well founded faith in the prospective outlook of the country.

There are hundreds of farmers in the Sound district who could with profit dispose of one-half of land they own to incoming settlers and thus materially aid in the development and upbuilding of this incoming State. One thing is certain, and that is, it will be but a few years before the public domain will be reduced to a minimum not worth the mentioning and then the work of subdivision will commence as a matter of pure necessity. Let it begin.

EXPRESSIONS of sympathy for either the living or slain of the aggressive party, in the late tragedy at Lathrop, California, are exceedingly few. Judge Terry's life has been marked by evidences of ferocity of temper that have indelibly stamped the mark of Cain on his character. Ever since the killing of Broderick he has been under a cloud, and public condemnation has been by no means lessened by his conduct during the quarter of a century that has intervened. His wife, the notorious Sarah Althea Hill-Sharon, is held in no higher respect. She was in a large degree the cause of the assault upon Judge Field. The relentless persecution began with her envenomed insult to, and defiance of, the Judge when he rendered the decision that her marriage with Sharon was not a legal one. It will be remembered that she shouted in open court, "How much did you get for that Judge?" and when the court ordered her arrest and removal, Judge Terry opposed the officers by the most violent means, for which he was sent to jail. The prediction is made that officer Nagle will be executed for the part he has been compelled to play in this drama.
