Strong Republean counties sent minorities of Democratic, and Democratic counties minorities of Republican delegates. This happy combination of political forces was reflected in the spirit which at every stage of its deliberations animated the Convention

Every material, industrial and professional interest was represented in its membership, and it was wholly free from all outside influences.

The business and taxpaying portion of our people was especially prominent and watchful of every interest of vital concern.

We believe that the Constitution finally adopted is in an eminent degree a conservatively progressive The powers conferred upon the Legislature are commensurate with the needs of the State, while the restriction placed upon legislative ac tion are such as experience in other States has shown to be wholesome or necessary. A careful perusal of its provisions will, we think, satisfy any candid mind, that a State government administered in harmony with its spirit and intent, will cause an immediate and wonderful increase in the wealth, population and happiness
