

A DANGEROUS TENDENCY

From such observations as may be made at this distance it appears that the constitutional convention is starting off at a rate that will not admit of finishing its work in time to submit the document to the people and give proper notice for an election.

One thing has appeared from the beginning, and this is, that too many, if not all of the members, are playing for a return to the first legislature of the state.

To those who have been watching the growth of this territory for the past ten years, and especially the past five years, it is clear enough that restriction of privileges to capital is precisely what we do not want.

The mortgage tax law and other adverse legislation in Oregon sent capital into this territory, which has prospered beyond all territorial precedent, and we now seem to have the opportunity to go into statehood with a momentum that promises wonderful growth in the next few years.

The error at this time of legislation which would stop the influx of capital should be apparent to everyone—members of the constitutional convention as well as their constituents.

It seems to many, on this side of the mountains at least, that counties should be left free to bond themselves for enterprises too great for private capital, if they should see fit to do so.

With the people electing their own legislature and to manage their own counties, we believe—led to do so by our faith in the American people to govern themselves—that no harm can come from leaving much, if not everything involved in this question, to the future, that future action may thus fit its own time.

Natural Wonders that Out-Rival Yosemite or the National Park.

The Grandeur of the Tietan.

The papers of the coast often are filled with glowing accounts of the beauties of Yosemite, or the natural wonders of the National Park.

Riding out from North Yakima to the Bethesda of the northwest, the Yakima Soda Springs, there a pleasant horse-back ride over a romantic ridge and under the shade of the fragrant fir and lordly pine, brings the tourist to the crest of Darland mountain; pausing for a moment to breathe the horses.
